

"PRIVATE" DALZELL'S VIEWS.
What the Noted Ohioian says of the Senatorial race in the Presidential election.

Correspondence of the Evening Star, Nov. 13, 1891.

As the smoke closes away from the great republican battle for protection one result is apparent as the figure of election, and that is that McKinley is in the field for the presidency, and another is that Sherman will easily succeed himself. Do you think I know? When did I ever guess wrong about buckeye politics? I will tell you why I get the thing down fine. Like other people I have my opinions and prejudices, and often wrong at any one, but I never put them in print. I have the newspaper habit of listening and talking about what I hear. Any one who has this faculty and exercises it conscientiously and faithfully just now cannot help ascertaining that the voice of Ohio today is for McKinley for President and John Sherman for Vice-President, nor that most hasty and misinformed youngsters, "not to the manner born," may scribble and telegraph foreign editors.

FORAKER NOT "IN IT."

Say what they may, Foraker is not in. Early in January the legislature will meet and organize, long before any caucus for the senatorship; the organization "many a slip twixt the cup and the lip." Who will change to the other? for are there not a speakership, a presidency of the senate and chairmanships and offices without due to distribute among the very men who elect the senators two years later? Here is an answer. There are just two possibilities. Are the Sherman men spring chickens?

Another element of uncertainty, and a hundred possible complications might arise from the many rich appointments to be made by Mr. McKinley. It would be a terrible idea to let him, as Senator, be a factor, nor can he be, in any way, useful to Sherman or Foster, and will carefully abstain from making any appointments until the election.

The fight is grand, fair and impartial, and any other course might leave McKinley's action in the premises open to a suspicion that his appointments were made with a view to influence the legislature in its choice of Senator.

MONEY WILL NOT BE USED.

Thank God, the corrupt use of money will not be so much as suspected; much less charged by even our enemies.

Foraker has done, and would be too honest to do otherwise.

Foster has plenty, but he is content to remain in the great office which he now so ably and acceptably fills. Like Foraker he will not be in it. Sherman, too, might be induced to consider the whole testimony of his grand character and career by the use of money, rich as he is. He has no need of it. The only coin he needs is the abiding confidence and esteem of the state he has so long served. He can buy the plumb if he wants it, the plum if he would have it, but he, like Foster, can never honestly accept it until the triumvirate agree to disagree and hand it to him as a peace offering.
